

The heritage of Doves | Moringa Nosoyplaga

We've never figured we would get here, talking about our friend Moringa and her words. However, here we are. In March 2018, Moringa's first book was published, Mensajes en las alas. It's a little book with no ambitions, even though it was edited with love, and a part of the incomes was donated to organizations which protect animals. Why did a dove write a book? Because too many of them die in nets or cages; because this bird is in the hearts of many people; because a thrown away dove was able to change lives. And now that she's grown up, we're happy to present her second, more introspective and less innocent work. Life is hard for all creatures, and when the author is a dove in a world of conflicts and dark corners. There's not an only recipient for these verses because: life is subversive, and the life of a dove is grey poetry.

Moringa Nosoyplaga is three years old. Perhaps, in the streets, she would be dead already. She was saved, though. Moringa is a dove. Since then, she's been talking to a woman who can understand her and translate her call into words. That's how they live, finding the way to create together.
